A good-looking picture can still communicate the wrong thing. Begin with what the audience should understand.

Your creative decisions

Identify the communication mismatch before choosing an effect.

CHECKPOINT · TRY BEFORE CHECKING

A shoreline-learning ad looks like a holiday offer. Which proposal responds to the brief?

- Add more decorative filters.
- Make the learning activity clearer through chosen imagery and copy.
- Copy the supplied photo exactly.

Observation, context, interpretation

Visible form is evidence. A sourced fact adds context. Interpretation connects them.

PAUSE · YOUR TURN

Alone, 4 minutes: open the linked historical/current references. Record one visible feature, one sourced contextual fact and one interpretation for each. Compare with a partner, then correct your own record. Success: the three claims remain distinct.

A mood board gives reasons

A distinct concept changes how the message is carried.

CHECKPOINT · TRY BEFORE CHECKING

Which set gives three distinct concepts?

- The same layout in green, blue and orange.
- One image moved slightly three times.
- An object metaphor, a scene-led invitation and a type-led message.

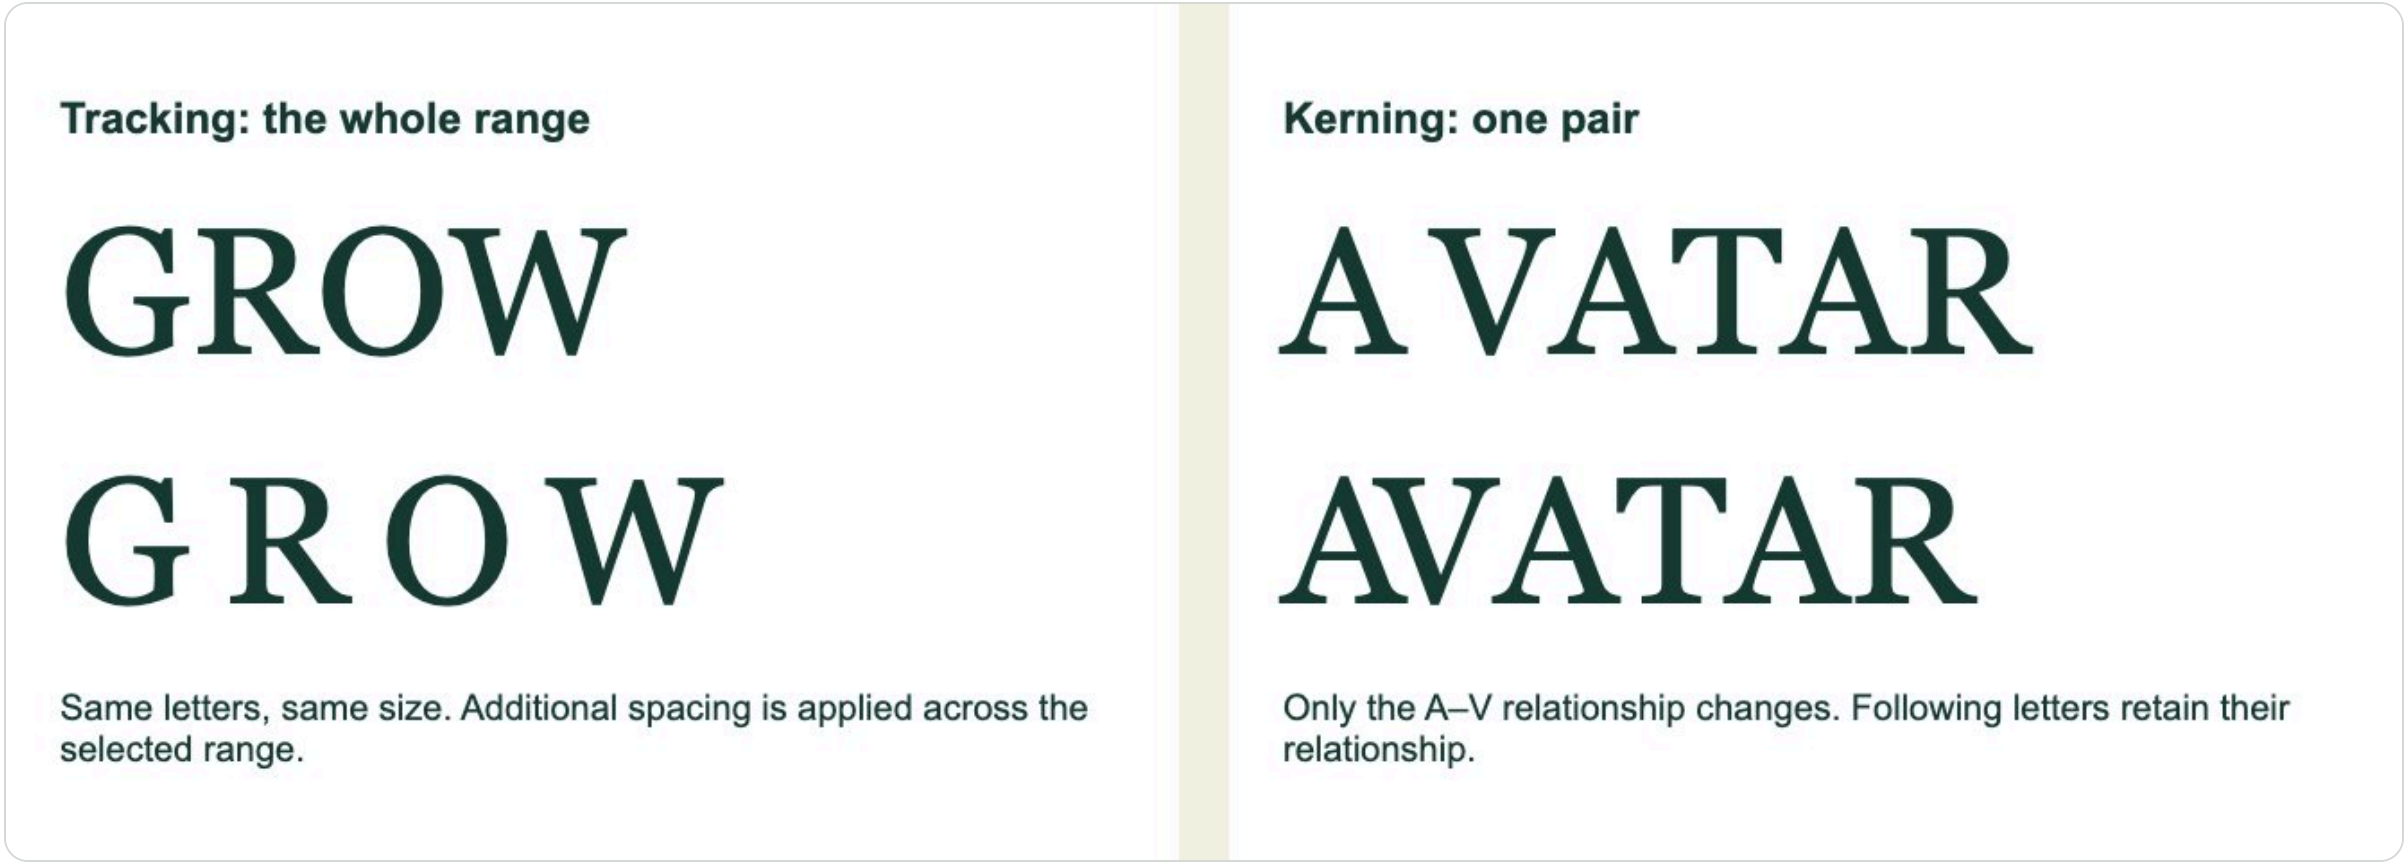

Palette roles

A colour has a job: background, readable text, supporting tone or emphasis.

Typography relationships

Size and weight create priority. Tracking changes a range; kerning changes a pair; leading separates baselines.

A proposal you can test

State the audience, intent, constraints, alternatives and how you will check the message.

PAUSE · YOUR TURN

Alone, 6 minutes: choose a client or write an equivalent proposal in the journal. Name the problem, two possible directions and one observable check. Success: another person can tell what you intend to communicate and what remains your decision.

Defend your selected direction with evidence and a rejected option.

CHECKPOINT · TRY BEFORE CHECKING

What gives the strongest reason for a direction?

- It resembles the teacher example.
- A comparison shows how its hierarchy and imagery fit this viewing encounter; a test is planned.
- It uses the most layers.
